

500 Steps

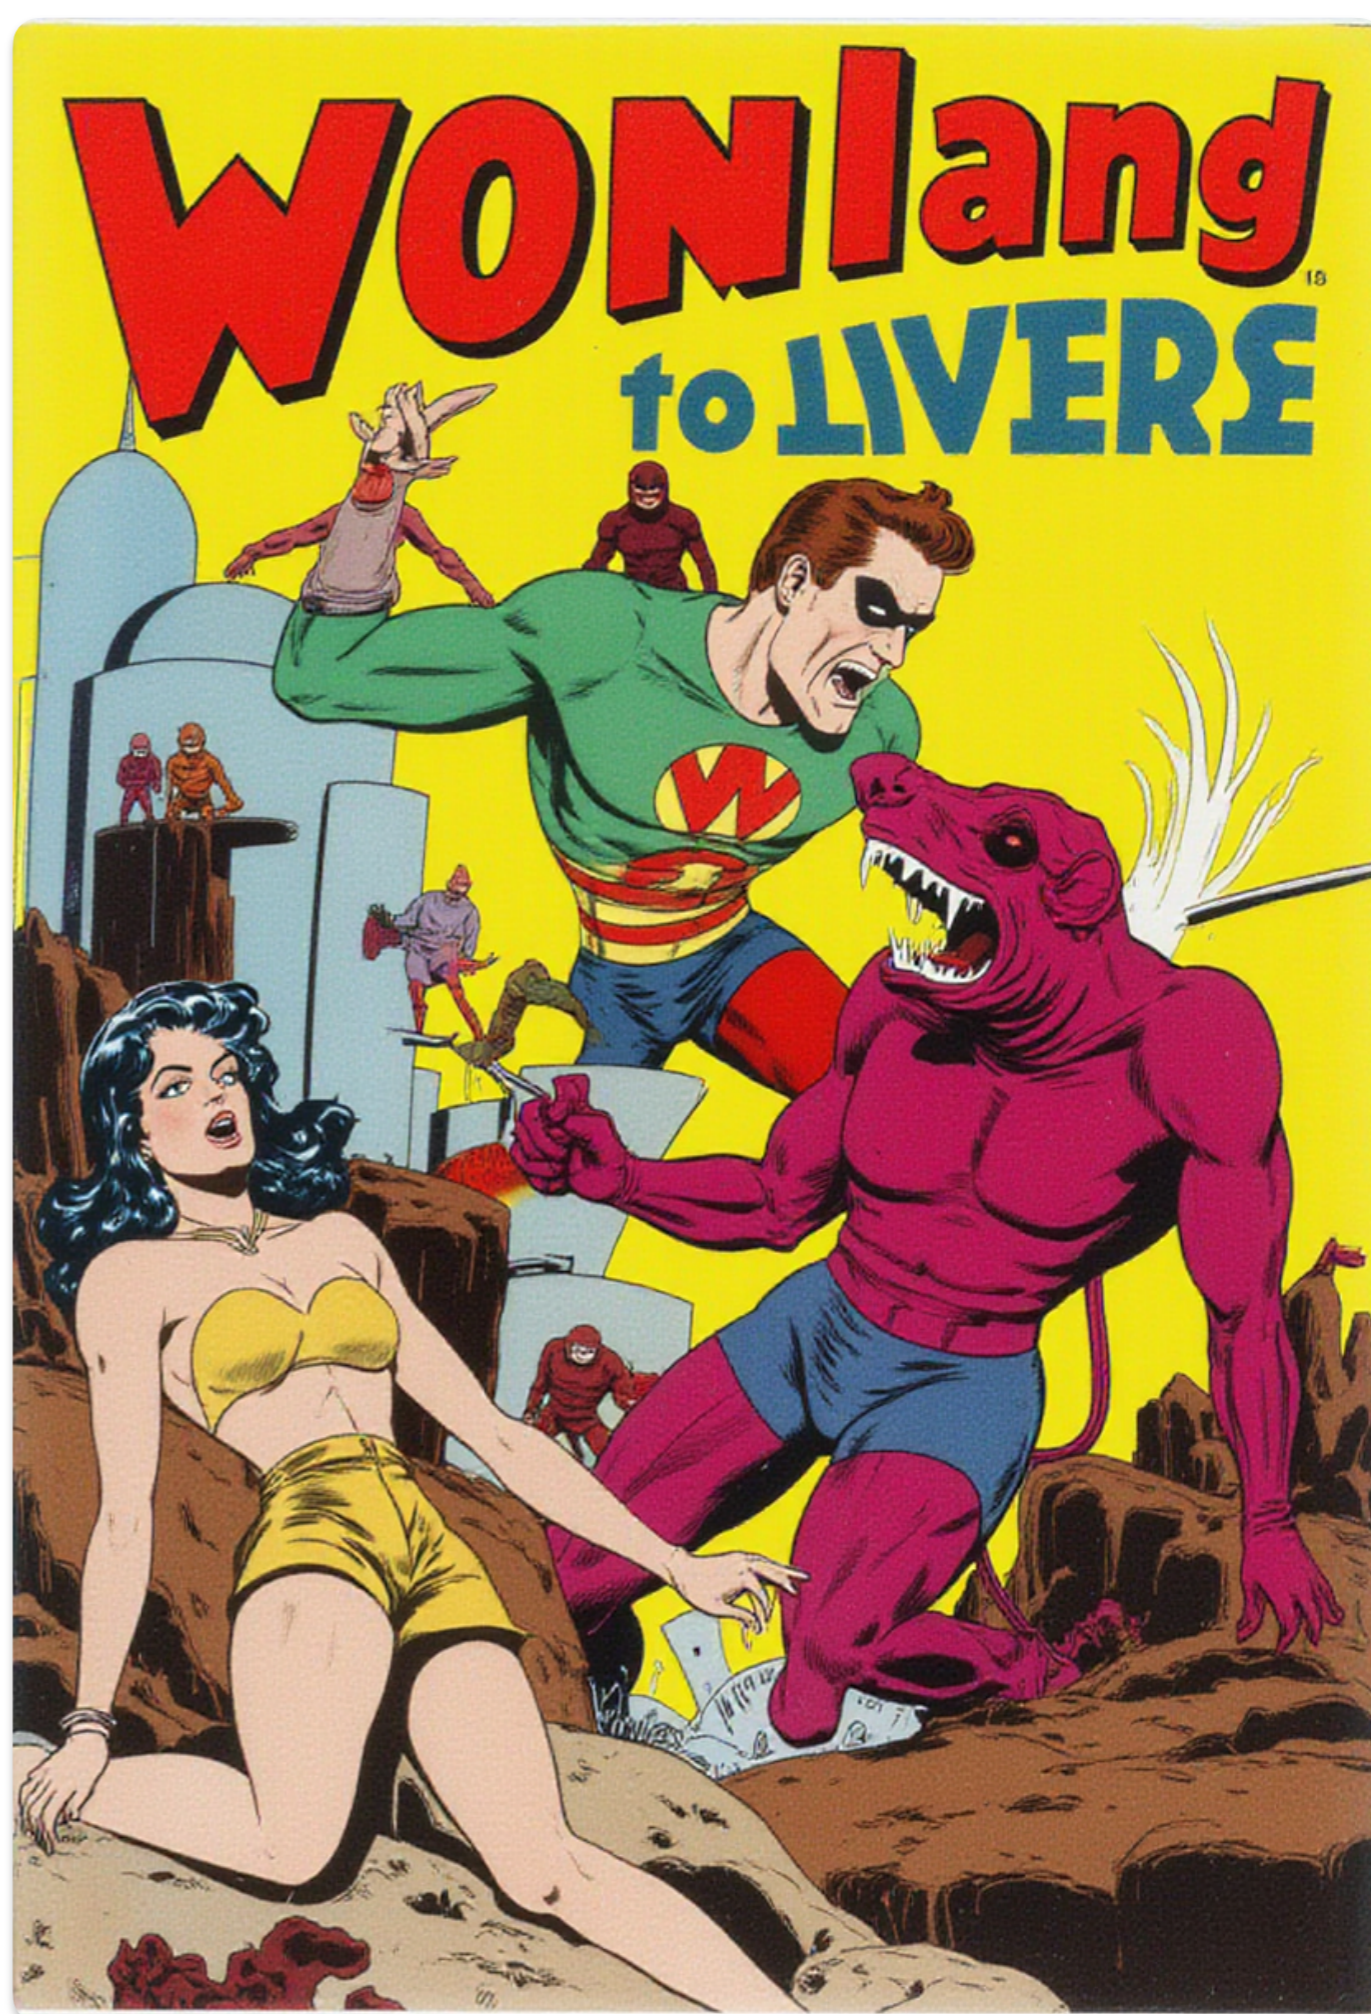

Right off the bat at 500 steps you will get some likeness. This will mostly be baseline Flux. If you're training a concept that exists then you will see some convergence even at just 500 steps.

a vintage comic book cover for Wonderman, featuring three characters in a dynamic action scene. The central figure is Wonderman with a confident expression, wearing a green shirt with a yellow belt and red gloves. To his left is a woman with a look of concern, dressed in a yellow top and red skirt. On the right, there's a monstrous creature with sharp teeth and claws, seemingly attacking the man. The background is minimal, primarily blue with a hint of landscape at the bottom. The text WONDER COMICS and No. 11 suggests this is from a series.

It will start to break apart a little bit here. Be patient. It's learning.

A vintage comic book cover titled 'Wonderman Comics'. The central figure is Wonderman who appears to be in a combat stance. He is lunging at a large, menacing creature with a gaping mouth, revealing sharp teeth. Below the main characters, there's a woman in a yellow dress holding a small device, possibly a gun. She seems to be in distress. In the background, there's a futuristic-looking tower with a few figures standing atop. The overall color palette is vibrant, with dominant yellows, greens, and purples.

1750 Steps

Hey! We're getting somewhere! The caption as a prompt should be showing our subject well at this stage but the real test is breaking away from the caption to see if our subject is present.

2500 Steps

There he is! We can now prompt more freely to get Wonderman doing other stuff. Keep in mind we will still be limited to what we trained on, but at least we have a great starting point!
